

What I love about being a military child
Is the guidance my parents give, strong, stern – yet mild

I love to hear about their stories of courage and zeal
And the way they represented the Nation's will

I love to hear about the wars they fought
And the silent prayers they bought
Hoping to make it home in the end
Only to regroup and go back again

I love to hear about their places of travel
And the different cultures they managed to unravel

What I love about being a military child
Is knowing their history and strides they have made for me
And that makes me smile

By: Julian Mose'